ABSTRACT

The National Archives' still picture collection contains over 5 million photographs, some of which date from the 17th century. In addition to documenting activities of 125 Federal agencies, they illustrate the social, economic, cultural, political, and diplomatic history of America from the earliest colonial times to the present and many aspects of life in other parts of the world. The photographs relevant to each government agency are described under that agency, and information is included about record group numbers, ordering, and availability. An index is also included. INTRODUCTION

The National Archives has been collecting still pictures since shortly after its establishment in 1934. There are now more than 5 million still picture items in the Audiovisual Archives Division, including artworks, photographs of artworks, posters, and photographs dating from the 17th century to the present. In addition to documenting activities of 125 Federal agencies, they illustrate the social, economic, cultural, political, and diplomatic history of America from the earliest colonial times to the present and many aspects of life in other parts of the world.

An index appears at the end of this paper. Entries refer to record group numbers, which are located on the right of the record group title line in the body of the paper. The Audiovisual Archives Division furnishes reproductions of these records, subject in some cases to copyright and/or restrictions imposed by the agency of transfer or the donor. Although the user will find personal research the more satisfactory method of selecting items, the Archives staff can handle limited inquiries by mail and phone.

The still picture research room, located in room 18N, is open from 8:45 a.m. to 5:00 p.m., Monday through Friday, except on legal holidays. Before coming to the research room, the user should obtain a pass in room 200B. Mail inquiries should be addressed to the Director, Audiovisual Archives Division, National Archives and Records Service, Washington, D.C. 20408. Telephone: 202-963-6493.
